For three generations, the Walsh family have worked the beautiful, green marble that is unique to Connemara in the West of Ireland. Their quarry at Lissoughter in the Connemara mountains first opened in the 19th century. In 1903, King Edward VII and Queen Alexandra visited it during the Royal Tour of Connemara. Today, the marble of Connemara can be found in the world's great monuments, in the halls of Trinity College Dublin, on the Victoria and Albert Museum in London, in Kensington Palace and in some of America's finest buildings.

Tara's Diary... is a meaningful and very beautiful way to show your pride in your Celtic heritage. It also makes a wonderful gift. The inspiration for the design was born out of Tara's need to buy something special to remember an occasion.

The time-honoured symbols of Celtic art and history appear in joyful abundance here. The spirals, Trinity Knots, and Claddagh symbols that have been passed on for thousands of years still carry a powerful legacy.
